Contents

Note to the paperback edition ix
Acknowledgements xi
Preface xiv
Abbreviations xix

I Intentionality
  1. Representation in speech and thought  2. The Tractatus: form and content  3. Repudiation of causal theories  4. A fresh start  5. Dispelling the confusions (Identity and surrogationalism; Thinking what is not the case; Knowing what one thinks; Satisfaction and fitting; Anticipating the future; Understanding and interpreting)

II Inductive reasoning 49

III The arbitrariness of grammar and the bounds of sense 69
  1. Grammar justified  2. Grammar unjustified  3. Illusory determinants of the bounds of sense (De re logical possibilities; The meanings of signs; Imaginability)  4. The arbitrariness of grammar and the immanence of meaning  5. Transgressing the bounds of sense

IV A note on negation 101
  1. Frege and Russell  2. The Tractatus criticisms of Frege  3. The meaning-body of negation
V Methodology in philosophical psychology
1. Psychology: a 'young science' or 'experimental methods and conceptual confusion'? 2. The descriptive method in philosophical psychology 3. The concepts of psychology and their role in human life 4. The plan for the treatment of psychological concepts 5. The preferred strategy

VI Memory and recognition

VII Willing and the nature of voluntary action
1. Agency and action 2. The prevalent tradition 3. 'My kinaesthetic sensations advise me . . .'
4. Is willing too merely an experience? 5. Diagnosis 6. Fantasies of the will (The innervationist and ideo-motor theories; Trying; Causation of action) 7. Voluntary and involuntary action

VIII Intending
1. Stage-setting 2. Wittgenstein: remembering what one was going to . . . 3. Wittgenstein: category distinctions 4. Intention and prediction 5. The language-game with 'I intend'

IX The mythology of meaning something

Index